PRESS-PRESIDENT.

More Favorable Comments Sustaining The veto is already the most popular act of his dministration.—Boston Herald. Rominstration.—Bostos Hernid.

President Aribur's veto, we say again, will meet the approbation of the people.—Lemensorth Times.

President Arthur's veto was wise and timely, and aught to have been sustained.—Scrunton Republican.

Nothing that President Arthur has done since he assumed office redounds more to his credit than his last veto.— Wilkes-Burr Record.

In thus bravely stemming the tide of lavish ex-penditure of public money the President will un-doubtedly have the country's approval.—Teleton.

Triegram.

The President did his duty in vetoing the bill, and Congress in passing it over the veto, or in passing it in the first place, did wrong very decidedly.—Cincianali Guette.

The President has firsy millions at his back on any such issue as this, and it is a great pity that the re was not enough cool intelligence in Congress to see it.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

When his enemies and opponents unite with his friends in rising up to praise him it is pretty good evidence that the man holding the position of President of the United States has performed an act that required courage, honesty, and the conviction of principle.—Absony Express.

President Arthur, in dealing with the river and act that required courage, honesty, and the conviction of principle. —Albuny Express.

President Arthur, in dealing with the river and harbor bith has snown to the has a mind of his own, and the courage to act according to his convictions. He need not have vected the measure outright, although he presents sufficient reasons for having done no.—Pritabery Commercial.

President Arthur has certainty proven himself possessed of manly independence. His veto of the twenty year and then her bith its refusal to pardon Sergeant Mason, and his last veto of the river and harbor bith, all no to show him eminently qualified for the exalted position he occupies so acceptably.—Indiangoda Journal.

It required no little re-olutions and framess to take this step. Andrew Jackson himself never performed we act with the little for greater courage, and he was niways married forward and sustained by vera-men passion. President Arthur, on the contrary, as a calm nort of man, and has setted as the deliberate consideration.—Republican Smitned, Mitenakee.

Sentinet, Miterackee.

Rarely has the legislative branch of the government received such a rounke from the executive as was administered to Congress yested by in the President's yete of the river and harbor bill. Yete mes ages are not particularly fare, and in most cases they merely announce a difference of opinion between the President and Congress; but the veto of yearenday poinced out the petty selfalmess and the widespread and growing indifference of Congression to the interests of the Nation.—Calcago Times.

President Arthur has made as few mistakes as any man who has occupied the Presidentee.

resident Arthur has made as few mistakes avany man who has occupied the Presidency. * *
The country is fortunate in fraving a man like Arthus at the head of affairs just at this time. With all the pressure upon him to sign the bill it required great moral courage to veta it. He has done well and deserves and will have the thanks of the country; for while there are many deserving appropriations in the bill there are several notorious jous and big steals in it.—Hartford Evening Prot.

ing Post.

The President was entirely right in refusing to approve the bill in its shape as placed before him for consideration. The reasons he gave and the statements of heat he presented are unanswerable. There are appropriations in the bill which are unquestionably of local importance only, and of limited im to stance at tind—appropriations which are not for the "common defense" or "general welfare," the only class of appropriations Congress can constitutionally—make.—Philadephia Public Ledge.

We publish the assessment of the properties of the constitutionally—make.—Philadephia Public Ledge.

Ledger.

We publish the yelo message in full, which renders comment on it unnecessary, as the President states his position clearly and unequivocally, and it is in harmony with good government. Day by day the President is demonstrating that he is equal to all the requirements of the Chief Magistracy of this great mation, and by his wise and prudent course is gaining the considence of the nation in spite of the attacks of petty politicians who find they cannot decive nor use him.—Harrisburg Tetegraph.

The veto of the President was something of a surprise, because it was supposed that he was too

The veto of the President was something of a surprise, because it was supposed that he was too much of a partisent to go out of his way to further complicate party matters next November; but he was chosen to act up to his conviction of what was right in his high office, leaving to the judgment of the people the wisdom of the proceeding. * * * His duty was plain in the premises, and when he said that no serious damage would be likely to follow his rigid performance of it, and that a reform in appropriations might be initiated by his act, he concluded to perform it with that courage that is entirely devoid of passion.—Philadelphia Inquartr.

The President's objections to the bill were stated in the most temperate and respectful language. Considering the character of the measure and the merits of the action of the two Houses, they were expressed with undeserved considerateness. Moreover, the objections were valid and so strong as to admit of no honest question. They will commend themselves to the judgment and housesy of the country with increasing force the more they are considered. The President, by his apright, manly, and courageous set, did more for his own strength and popularity than he could have accomplished by recommending and approving any number of meritorious measures.—New Fork Times.

President Arthur has again, by a judicious veto. compassed by Feconimending and approving any number of ineritorious measures.—New York Times. President Arthur has again, by a judicious veto, deserved the thanks of the people, and the thanks of the intelligent and thoughtful people he will have. The best defense of the veto is the veto message fiscil. It is brief, but in well-expressed sentences it gives the reasons which have induced the President to withhold his signature from the river and harbor bill. They are reasons which must command respect and approval. Taking into consideration the pressure by Congressmen from all parts of the country to induce the President to sign the bill, his refusal, even more than in the anti-Chinese matter, shows that he is possessed of nerve and backbone. It is a brave as well as a righteous act, and demonstrates anew that the President is entitled to the honor and esteem of good citizens. For it must be remembered that in taking this course he offends alike Stalwart, Half-breed, and Independent, Democrat, Republican, and Greenbacker.—Hartford Courant.

A CHESTER COUNTY SNAKE.

The Biggest Story of the Season-Capture of the Monster. At Bryn Mawr, near Philadelphia, is the beau-tiful country seat of George W. Childs. A tremendous big snake has been seen in that locality for some years. Sometimes in the dead hour of the night it would wriggle up the old Lancaster turnsome years. Sometimes in the dead hour of the night it would wriggle up the old Lancaster turnpike toward the stables of "Press" Lobb at Berwyn to chaim some of his handsome horses. The Harriton Flour Mills, located near the lake inhabited by this big snake are owned by the Messrs, Pyle. The dam which supplies them with water is about an acre in extentand is quite deep. The race which conveys the water from the dam to the mill-wheel is also deep. On Monday last, while the Pyles were at work at the mill, the wheel suddenly began to slow up, and soon, in spite of the heavy flow of water, stopped alt gether, and the large gate was raised several inches. Mr. Pyle, sr., raised the trap-door in the floor of the mill and descended to the wheel to ascertain the cause of the stoppage. Tangled in the wheel, wriggling, squirming, and struggling, was a huge water-snake, evidently the denizen of the dam for whom such long watches hat been kept. The mill-wheel is a strong one, but the struggles of the snake for liberty and an escape from the agony it endured were plainly weakening it. Mr. Pyle seized an lee hook which was fortunately close at hand, and, plunging it into the body of the snake, hauled it out of the wheel and pluned it to the floor. The reptile had evidently received severe wounds prior to its capture and was greatly weakened, or probably Mr. Pyle would not have secured so easy a victory. Long after the capture the animal squirmed and struggled violently, and was not finally dispatched until young Mr. Pyle brought a heavy fire-shovel, with which he amashed its head. While the snake was pinned to the floor the pet est of the mill, moved probably by curiceity, approached it closely, and bararly escaped being engulad in its wide-opened mouth. The lead of the snake deed soon after the blows of the sovel were administered, but the body, as is brush, it is said, with all anakes, retained life infilial sudden. When measured the ophidian proved to be twenty feet long and twenty-four inches in circumference at the bigge
